What is an Intervention? An intervention is an unconditionally loving, non-judgmental, and factual confrontation directed by a professional interventionist in which friends and relatives perform a great act of love!

An addiction intervention is a lifesaving mission whereby loving family member and concerned friends or employers are educated about addictions and mental health, led by a trained addiction interventionist to help a loved one, providing them with an opportunity for recovery.

- directed by a trained interventionist
- confrontation from family and friends
- great act of unconditional love
- education on addiction and mental health – related topics
- What is the goal of intervention? To gently knock down the walls of delusion and denial, convincing the loved one that there is a problem and that recovery is possible. Interventions are not just for the addicted person, it is for the entire family system.
- break down the cycle of denial for the untreated person and whole family
- educating the untreated person on recovery and treatment

What is the objective of an intervention? The objective is to educate, facilitate change within the structure of the family environment to promote recovery. If the IP (Identified Patient, intervened upon Person) does not agree and accept treatment, the family has gained recovery resources from the intervention process to continue with their recovery process.

- to educate the family system and promote recovery
- build on coping skills and create personal recovery resources within the family system

Remember, anyone can be addicted to drugs and alcohol and the effects on the family can be devastating. Be sure you protect your loved ones from this world-wide problem.
